Check Out a Summery Italian Runway Set in New York By Sarah Spellings

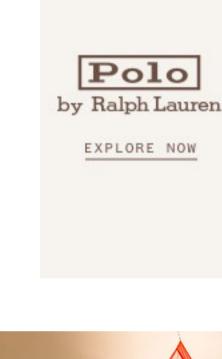

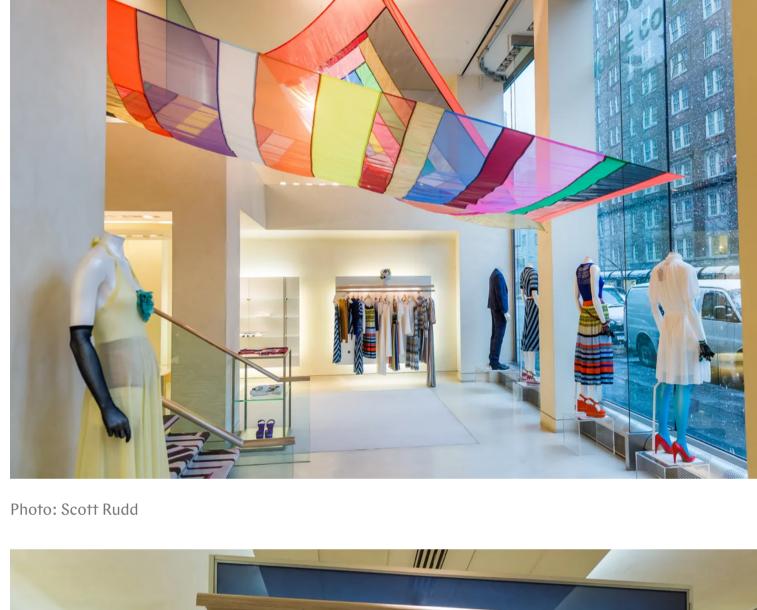

Fashion designer Angela Missoni staged one of the most colorful shows in Milan last fall by hanging rainbow tapestries like kaleidoscopes over her runway. Now you can see them in New York, at Missoni's flagship store on the Upper East Side.

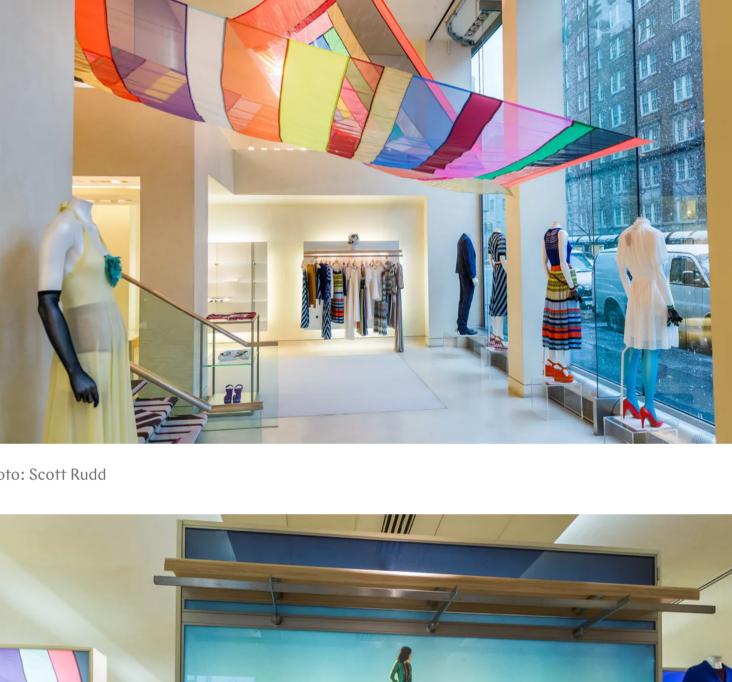

Hand-sewn for the show by the New Mexico-based textile artist and sculptor Rachel Hayes, the bright patchwork textiles cast a rainbow-tinted light on models' faces, their giant hats, and the summer collection's sparkly, breezy clothes.

On Madison Avenue from now until June 30, passersby can walk inside the Missoni store to check them out. Two tapestries hang from the store's ceiling like a small, summery getaway, made of ripped nylon, shimmery organza, and gold lamé. Titled "Dreams of Being," the installation is part of creative director Angela Missoni's ongoing Surface Conversation art series.

of her textiles at sunset. The tapestries debuted at Missoni's September show, and Hayes has since become one of the brand's favorite collaborators. Her artwork is featured in the summer 2018 collection's ad campaign, which was photographed on sand dunes at the White Sands National Monument in New Mexico. Hayes's bright colors echo the bright, colorful clothing that is Missoni's trademark. Sign up for the Cut Shop newsletter A stylish weekly guide to help SIGN UP Enter your email
